Public Office Landscape™

Living Office™

Living Office helps people to customise their methods, tools and places of work to express and enable shared character and purpose. It is based on what is fundamental to all and evolves continuously in response to change. It is a more natural and desirable workplace that fosters greater connection, creativity, productivity and, ultimately, greater prosperity for all.

Public Office Landscape

Designed by Yves Béhar and fuseproject, 2013

In the new landscape of work, technology enables us to work anywhere and to collaborate virtually. Despite this, people continue to be drawn to the office for work and interaction. At Herman Miller, we believe office landscapes that encourage people to work together foster greater productivity and enhance everyone's ability to generate ideas.

Through global research, we've learned that 70 percent of workplace collaboration happens at the desk. Most of these interactions are brief, typically lasting three to five minutes. At the same time, people – supported by mobile technology – are spending more time away from their individual workspaces.

Based on the belief that the more people connect, the better they work, Public transforms every part of the office – including individual desks – into places for collaboration. It's the first office system to support casual work and to provide comfort at the desk, in circulation spaces, and in group areas – all within a consistent design vocabulary. Visually uniform and modular surfaces, storage, and seating can be configured into a broad range of settings that encourage fluid transitions between collaborative and focused work.

Designer Story

Understanding the importance of collaboration in the workplace and knowing that it happens most often at the desk, Yves Béhar and his team began investigating solutions that would merge casual parts of the office environment with spaces where people work, evenly spreading collaborative zones throughout the floorplan. As a starting point, they explored solutions that would bring a new level of ergonomics to casual and group seating.

Béhar's concept proposed collaborative areas in close proximity to and as a part of individual workspaces. The design would encourage the type of productive interaction that drives organisations forward.

During the development process, Béhar tested prototypes at the fuseproject office in San Francisco. He and his team worked among the evolving design for 18 months and used their experiences to inform and refine the concept.

Collaborative Flow

We believe collaboration isn't exclusive to conference rooms or desks; it happens everywhere. Public was designed to support fluid interactions and spontaneous conversations across the entire landscape, keeping the office in a state of flow, where people are engaged, focused, and able to move freely between collaborative and individual modes of work.

Casual Performance

The Social Chair is the core component of the Public system. It brings a new level of ergonomics and functionality to soft seating by accommodating a range of people and postures as they work. The chair encourages the purposeful interactions that drive work – at the desk, in group areas and throughout the entire office.

Both literally and figuratively, the Social Chair is designed for connection. Its open, inviting shape encourages people to sit and interact, while its top surface links seamlessly to desks, storage units, and other Social Chairs.

With the Social Chair, people don't have to choose between ergonomic seating for work and casual seating for lounging. The chair's innovative design pares materials to a minimum, giving the seat and back the flexibility to accommodate comfortable movement through a variety of postures and activities.

Vibrant and Varied

With a modular kit of parts, Public enables people to work how and where they want. Casual group areas become destinations for brainstorming, teamwork, presentations and meetings. Individual workspaces facilitate sharing and interaction, or productivity and privacy.

Public elements can be arranged into configurations that express culture and foster belonging – and that can evolve as needs change. Layers of colour and material create visual consistency and enhance the flow of movement from individual to group activities, and from private to shared spaces.

The Social Chair offers a solution for the entire office landscape by serving as a foundational element for community areas, team spaces, and individual desks. The versatile design is streamlined, visually light, and remarkably comfortable – achieved with a fraction of the material used for traditional upholstered soft seating. The chair’s internal supports are made of a patented polymer that maintains elasticity without losing its shape, providing people with ergonomic responsiveness.

Public is a flexible system that can be configured and reconfigured to suit an organisation’s needs. Assemblages of Public’s components form group spaces that enable collaboration in close proximity to individual desks. With tools and technology to support the unique needs of groups, these highly functional spaces allow people to work together more effectively and productively.
